SECTION 1- SITUATION ANALYSIS

Brief Overview of the Company

Lux Leonis Skincare is a natural, handcrafted skincare line run by Dr. Ania Rynarzewska, a professor at Georgia College & State University. The logo is a custom coat of arms based on her Polish nobility ancestry. The name, “Lux Leonis” is Latin for “light of a lion” and represents the truth (and science) behind her products (“About Us”). Founded about seven years ago and constantly taking inspiration from nature and people, Lux Leonis Skincare strives to create safe, sustainable, and effective products (“Interview with Ania of Lux Leonis – Sorcery Soaps™”). Products are sold both directly to consumers and wholesale in hotels and shops in multiple states. One of the goals for direct business-to-consumer sales is to provide luxury without all the extra frills of complex and unsustainable packaging. Another goal for Lux Leonis is affordability which allows greater accessibility to luxury products. Lux Leonis has a target market of women that are 30+ years of age, but also offers products that target men and younger women as well. While soaps and candles are the highest-selling items of Lux Leonis, skincare brings in the highest amount of revenue as they have a higher price point and a more loyal consumer base. On the marketing side, Lux Leonis has seen substantial growth on social media in the past year, but consistent and cohesive marketing is lacking. Currently, the marketing is directed towards a product-based approach, but with hopes to shift the focus to health and wellness tips as well as a more interpersonal approach on socials.

Problem Statement

Lux Leonis is facing a lack of consistent and personable marketing. On Instagram, “41% of people surveyed said a brand's content helps them research the product... and many expressed a desire to hear from brands in their own voices, (“How Instagram Boosts Brand and Drives Sales | Facebook IQ | Meta for Business”))” indicating the importance of brand awareness.

However, while overall social media engagement has increased over the last year, Dr.

Rynarzewska struggles with infrequent social media management and noncohesive brand marketing as the owner and current sole employee. This correlates to faltering website traffic and lower sales which may affect the success of Dr. Rynarzewska’s business and income and may also affect customer interest in the product.

Internal factors pertaining to the Situation Analysis

The mission of Lux Leonis Skincare is “Lux Leonis is devoted to re-formulating traditional recipes with exotic, farm-fresh ingredients that will provide you with the upscale, luxurious experience we wholeheartedly believe you deserve (“About Us”)). The internal factors that contribute to her current business position are her limited staff and lack of brand cohesion. To elaborate; as Dr. Rynarzewska is the key officer and the biggest internal stakeholder, the limited staffing she currently has does not allow for the level of brand expansion she desires. As previously stated, her additional occupation as an associate marketing professor at Georgia College & State University keeps her quite busy. Additionally, her 10+ years of experience in advanced statistical analysis and availability as an analyst and researcher contribute to her impressive academic background. This academic background clearly demonstrates how she’s able to blend traditional body and beauty care with science (Rynarzewska). Apart from her academic life, she also blends her other personal interests into her brand. For example, her logo was created by a past student and she tries to blend her Polish heritage in her products. She also lives on a large farm with many flowers and scents that she says influences her soapmaking (“Interview with Ania of Lux Leonis – Sorcery Soaps™”).

Additionally, her lack of cohesive branding and inconsistent posting schedule hinders her ability to grow her business. Her business sells a variety of soaps, skincare products, and candles that mostly target women, however, she has a smaller target market of men as well. Her soaps are all handmade and are marketed as artisan soaps with the finest ingredients. They have various designs, scents, and sizes and can be bought in packs or individually. Another category listed on the Lux Lenois website is “bath, body, and zen” which offers body bombs, lotions, scrubs, and butters, as well as hand & body washes and bubble bars, and wands. The “Gentlemen’s Zone” category offers candles, soaps, facial mist, shaving pucks, cologne, and other various Lux Lenois products that are geared towards men by their uses, scents, and appearance. Lux Leonis also offers hair care: hair masks, shampoos, and conditioners, and home ambiance products: candles and wax melts. The candles tend to be sold as seasonal items, more popular in the fall and winter during the holiday season. Her most expensive products are her facial care products, but these also have the most loyal consumer base. These include facial creams, mists, serums, and more. The products on the Lux Leonis website range from prices as low as $5 to as high as $75 (Lux Lenois Handcrafted). She markets many of these products on her social media, such as Instagram (@lux_leonis_skincare) and Facebook (Lux Leonis Skincare on Facebook).

The procedures that relate to this are her inconsistent posting schedule, nonexistent themes or patterns in her posts, and the lack of a formal brand package or standardized brand image. She currently handles the problem of her limited staffing by getting interns when possible and turning to public relations students to help find solutions.

External factors pertaining to the situation analysis

Lux Leonis Skincare is mentioned in interviews, youtube reviews, articles, and more. The business is found on georgiagrown.com, a website for Georgia small businesses that simply lists basic business information (“Lux Leonis”). On soapchallengeclub.com, Lux Leonis is recognized with a “Best Newbie Award” to celebrate her as an outstanding new soapmaker with less than a year in the soapmaking community or less than a certain amount sold (“Mini Drop Swirl Winners”). The Houston County Living Media Blog in an article titled “Luxury at Your Fingertips” recounts Dr. Rynarzewska’s start in skincare and the background behind her business (Rose). Another interview with Sorcery Soaps highlights the reasons for starting the Lux Leonis brand and casual questions about favorite products, inspirations, and creativity (“Interview with Ania of Lux Leonis – Sorcery Soaps™”). Both Mercer University and Florida State University blogs (where she has previously taught and attended as a student, respectively) write about Lux Leonis Skincare. The Mercer University article focuses more on the product line and is coupled with a short Youtube Video showcasing Lux Leonis products (Howard). Florida State focused more on Lux Leonis' fundraising efforts for Ukraine, showing Lux Leonis' dedication to social responsibility and wellness (Roberts). On Youtube, user Dr. Yvette Maureen also gives a visual product review of Lux Leonis products, stating her opinion on about five different products (Foster). As for those who share Lux Leonis’s interest and concerns of sustainability, soapmaking, and luxury, one would first point to Lush, a mainstream cosmetic retailer with stores all across the country focusing on sustainable packaging and luxury products. There are also hundreds of NGOs whose sustainability efforts would support Lux Leonis’s endeavors. Additionally, on the small business side, there seems to be a substantial soapmaking community with an interest in the craft, including those who mentioned Lux Leonis in their articles such as Sorcery Soaps and Soap Challenge Club as well as multiple other soapmaking communities on various social platforms. Related to Lux Leonis’s sustainability efforts, 43% of American consumers say the environmental impact of packaging is important (Feber et al.) while 69% of US consumers think retailers need to change to become more sustainable in their business endeavors (Dahlhoff). Likewise, a more informal poll demonstrates consumer interest in healthy ingredients is driving the growth of natural and organic ingredients (“Growth of Natural and Organic poll”) such as those used in Lux Leonis products. As related to Lux Leonis operations, the fourth quarter of the year typically tends to be the highest-selling period as candles become more in demand and holiday shopping commences. In addition to this period, dates surrounding more traditionally-feminine holidays such as Valentine’s Day and Mother’s Day could be an important period, but Lux Leonis hasn’t taken advantage of these periods which plays into the issue of infrequent and sometimes nonexistent marketing.

SWOT Analysis

Strengths

Being that her business is not a corporation and is run as an independent small business, there is more likelihood of getting support from other small businesses, local support, and influencers working to gain a wider following. There is independence to set your own schedule, and create a product that you believe in and are passionate about.

Weaknesses

The business lacks staff members to help with sales tasks, therefore, making it difficult to prioritize marketing. A lack of staff also means that all responsibilities lie on one person, so there is more pressure to get things done promptly and it becomes difficult to time manage if you have other priorities. The target market for this business is mainly only focused on women 30+ years of age, therefore the younger generation are excluded from using these products even though there are products that do not necessarily have an age restriction. Only uses one social media platform (Instagram) to market and engage with customers, which leads to losing possible sales. Lux Leonis CEO rarely shows her face or vocally talks about the business on their social media.

Opportunities

Establishing a staff will allow her to take more of a management position where she can oversee her company and focus on her next steps to expand her business. Market demand will see a rise as the upcoming holiday season begins and candle utilization will increase, in turn, driving business and traffic towards her other products such as skincare. Collaborating with customers on platforms such as TikTok, Instagram, and Facebook will increase brand awareness and get her company heard, and seen to bring in more customers

Threats

The skin care industry is highly competitive and has a high barrier to entry. Also, selling a product that requires physical touch is difficult to sell strictly through an online presence, customers want to feel the product in person so they can experience it whether they like it or not. Products based on scent, touch, and long-term usage risk not selling as well when the customer cannot have it in the “right now”.

SECTION 2- OBJECTIVES

In order to further improve Lux Leonis’ online presence and solve her problems of inconsistency and non cohesiveness, we have come up with three essential objectives for the brand. The first objective is to create a professional and cohesive brand across multiple platforms by fully integrating profile themes and posting consistently on Instagram, Facebook, and Tik Tok by the end of 2023. This will create a cross-platform theme that gives Lux Leonis a professional look while also aiding Dr. Rynarzewska in posting consistent content. The second objective is to increase user traffic on the Lux Leonis website by 30% and increase social media traffic by 20% in 2023. A large part of this objective involves looking at analytics and being able to increase her audience overall. Traffic increase will hopefully lead to more purchases on the website or from Instagram, but at the very least, more traffic would translate to greater brand awareness. The last objective is in 2023, to expand the target audience by increasing the overall engagement of both men and users under 30 by 20% on Instagram and Facebook. While Lux Leonis has stated the main target audience for the brand is women over 30, we believe that expanding this audience to younger consumers would be beneficial, especially with its themes of sustainability and affordability which tend to be important to the younger demographic. As for men, Lux Leonis already has products that target them, but there is practically no marketing for them.

SECTION 3- AUDIENCE

Lux Leonis' problems regarding the non-cohesive branding and inconsistent social media presence affect mostly the external public. As the sole employee of Lux Leonis, Dr. Aniya Rynarzewska is undeniably the sole internal audience of all business issues, however, she isn't necessarily targeting herself. As for the external public, women aged 30+, men of various ages, middle class, those who value sustainability, and those who know a bit about skincare but not much are the target audiences affected.

First, Dr. Rynarzewska had explicitly stated that her brand targets women 30+, both with branding and the offered product mix. They are most affected because these issues are limiting their accessibility and awareness of the Lux Leonis brand. Women are also more likely to use Instagram and Facebook (Duggan), which is the main digital marketing platform for Lux Leonis. However, the female audience under 30 is also another audience Lux Leonis should be targeting. As increasing the size of this target audience is already an essential objective, strategies for doing so will be later in the report. Lux Leonis has also curated products specifically for men in order to expand its target market. However, because these offerings are poorly advertised and not as well known, men are affected. Strategies for increasing this key target audience are also laid out later in this report. An overlapping demographic also affected is middle-class consumers. One of the most important aspects of the products is the price. Lux Leonis believes luxury and affordability go hand in hand, and such attracts more middle-class or lower-middle-class consumers with reasonable prices. This is not an aspect of Lux Leonis that is well advertised, however, which may turn some lower-middle-class consumers away.

Sustainability is also becoming increasingly important to the Lux Leonis brand. Similar to the naked packaging of LUSH Cosmetics, Lux Leonis hopes to have very little, or environmentally sound packaging. Though since this transition has not yet been made nor has the intention been communicated, the audience who cares about sustainability may not be interested in the products. The last group is people who know about skincare but aren't experts on the subject. Social media is supposed to educate and teach viewers, but a lot of the content isn't engaging or there is a lack of content as a whole.

SECTION 4- STRATEGIES, TACTICS, AND STRATEGIC SOLUTIONS

The three objectives that we had chosen for Lux Leonis were to create a professional and cohesive brand across multiple platforms by fully integrating profile themes and posting consistently on Instagram, Facebook, and Tik Tok, to increase user traffic on the Lux Leonis website by 30% and increase social media traffic by 20%, and to expand the target audience by increasing the overall engagement of both men and users under 30 by 20% on Instagram and Facebook all in 2023. The strategies and tactics chosen each reflect one of these objectives and the strategic solutions demonstrate how we can implement these tactics.

Objective 1: Re-evaluating and Increasing Audiences

The first objective that will be discussed is to expand the target audience by increasing the overall engagement of both men and users under 30 by 20% on Instagram and Facebook in 2023.

Strategy #1

Our first strategy is to increase the promotion of men's products. To achieve this strategy she can implement tactics like creating highlights for different products and other important information, but specifically a highlight that includes all men's products and links to buy on the website. Another way to help expand the men's products is by posting at least once a week for men's products, that way it is always in the target market faces and allows them to become more familiar with the product. Lastly she can start coupling men's and women's products which is her most popular audience right now.

Strategy #2

The next strategy we suggest to tackle this objective is to create more Gen Z/young millennial-targeting content. Our first tactic is to post more frequent reels. Gen Z/young millennials seem to be more attracted to content that is engaging and graphic, and reels have become the perfect way to put content out in a quick and visual way to please social media users. After looking over Lux Leonis Instagram we noticed there were very few reels and the ones on there could use some work. We intend to make her feed more vibrant and eye-catching to the younger generation. The next tactic is to partner with micro-influencer affiliate marketing. This will hopefully bring in more customers and allow the brand to be seen on a wider spectrum. Finally, to create more Gen Z/young millennial-targeting content Lux Leonis should hire an intern that is preferably a college student and is heavily engaged in social media. By having an intern, this will be a way for someone within the Gen Z/young millennial age group to be inside the company and possibly understand how to reach their peers most effectively. The intern will also be able to overall assist her with any other social media promotion.

Strategic Solution

To bring all of this together, Lux Leonis will host a giveaway for men's products for the holiday season and a few more times throughout the year. The giveaways will include different items or bundle deals for her mens products and is a way to recognize her male supporters. The purpose of this is to increase Lux Leonis's audience so we will implement ways to engage. The giveaway will consist of a list of instructions on how customers can win. It may include things like tag two friends, repost to your story, or like/comment. The giveaway will be a way to show some customer appreciation and help her become more interactive with her male following.

Objective 2: Creating a Professional and Cohesive Brand

The first objective our team came up with for Lux Leonis is to create a cohesive brand across multiple platforms. This will be done by fully integrating the profile themes on Instagram, Facebook, and Tik Tok by the end of 2023.

Strategy #1

The first strategy for this objective will be to create a comprehensive brand package for Lux Leonis. Having a brand package will allow the brands overall appeal to stay consistent and become a lot easier to manage. It will save a lot of time and help with the overall aesthetic of the brand. In order to achieve this strategy we came up with three tactics that will allow this plan to come to life. The first tactic will be to create templates on Canva that will be the standard for emails, posters, newsletters etc. The next tactic is to choose specific colors and fonts that will be used through the instagram and website, that way Lux Leonis appears organized and consistent to its audience. Finally the last tactic is to create a hashtag that will frequently be used on posts and stories to have another location where the products can be seen while also building a connection with customers if they were to leave feedback or show support.

Strategy #2

The next strategy will be to create a social media posting schedule. This posting schedule will consist of posting at least 3-4 times a week where there is potential for the highest impression volume on her social media platforms. These times can be found in the insight section on her instagram account. Another tactic for this strategy is to take the time to create a pool of templates that can be used across her social media accounts. This could include things like holiday templates, reels, packaging videos etc. By having these templates Lux Leonis will always have content to post and will keep the same aesthetic across all social media platforms.

Objective 3: Increasing Website and Social Media Traffic

Our next objective is to increase user traffic on the Lux Leonis website by 30% and increase social media traffic by 20% in 2023.

Strategy #1

To achieve this objective we suggest first providing the link for the website and specific products in more places. It would be convenient and beneficial to start including a link for products customers can purchase when they are posted. It is less work for the audience and nowadays we value things that are convenient. Our final tactic for this strategy is to affiliate links from our website. Networking with other brands and influences is a great way to bring more traffic to the website. The budget will support the expenses to pay to have her links included on other brands' websites and social media posts.

Strategy #2

Furthermore, the next strategy will be to work on SEO (search engine optimization). Being that the website is the first and most popular way to purchase her products there needs to be more energy put into increasing the demand for Lux Leonis products. In order to accomplish this plan she should implement a survey for her customers and potential customers asking what drew them to her website, along with other questions that can help understand what the audience wants to see. Receiving this feedback will allow her to make improvements and focus more on her target market as well. She would also need to update her content on a regular basis to not fade away into the algorithms. With so many brands promoting their products on social media, staying consistent has become a key factor to success and spreading brand awareness. Lux Leonis should strive to be consistent and build brand awareness at all times. Lastly, we suggest tracking traffic volume via link shares and clicks to understand where most of the website traffic is coming from and how to get more people's attention to the site.

Strategic Solution

In order to monitor their website traffic there will be an insight recap planned for each month. By reflecting on how sales and website traffic was for the previous month this will allow her to see her growth and/or if the tactics have been successful.

Introducing Lux Leonis, Skin Care Brand Utilizing the Natures Finest Ingredients

(Atlanta,GA) Lux Leonis Skincare is a natural, handcrafted skincare line run by Dr. Ania Rynarzewska, a professor at Georgia College & State University. Founded about seven years ago and constantly taking inspiration from nature and people, Lux Leonis Skincare strives to create safe, sustainable, and effective products. Lux Leonis utilizes the natures best ingredients and sources them directly from nature.

Utilizing such high quality ingredients creates a structure of luxury skin care and soaps that can be offered to customers that are inquired. Dr. Ania Rynarzewska uses research to her advantage and makes sure that the product you are receiving is of the highest quality possible, while providing you with the best product available. Dr. Ania Rynarzewska is not just in the business of making and selling products but in the business of creating a luxury experience through the high quality luxury skin care and soaps she creates.

"Finally, this is not just a company, it is a lifestyle. We live close to nature, we are part of nature. We use ingredients offered by nature." - Dr. Ania Rynarzewska Lux Leonis Skin Care is, after all, handcrafted with Nature's Best Ingredients.

Utilizing the new branding materials established in the branding guide the goal of these graphics is to establish the cohesive brand that Dr. Ania is seeking. The graphics utilize the selected fonts and color palette to continue the themes across multiple platforms. Utilizing the natural shapes helps communicate the natural nature of her products. The “who we are” post could be used on Instagram using the pinning feature to put at the top of her profile to quickly establish to her new customers what the brand is all about. Having giveaways and sales can drive up business and are a quick way to engage with customers. Overall using the branding guide to establish a cohesive brand will have a direct correlation with sales and business.

SECTION 6- CALENDAR/TIMETABLE

The Gantt chart seen above shows our plan for implementing the tactics previously gone over. Everything related to the objective of creating a cohesive brand would be done first. This is because this would essentially be a fresh start for Lux Leonis and should be done as soon as possible. The intern search process should also be done during that time. Some of the tactics would happen habitually, like tracking traffic on the website and social media and posting consistently so they are planned to take place the entire year. We understand that habits aren't created in a day, so we gave Lux Leonis until March to implement the posting schedule. By that time they should be posting consistently. Then during the summer, Lux Leonis does its first men's giveaway, first micro-influencer campaign, and starts its affiliate-link campaign. The second giveaway and second micro-influencer campaign would happen right before the holiday season. Lux Leonis should be evaluated constantly as stated in previous tactics, but a year-long evaluation should also be set for the end of the year.

SECTION 7 - BUDGET

The budget that Dr. Rynarzewska set for making changes for Lux Leonis was $2,000. Fortunately, due to the fact that most tactics are exclusively online changes, it is relatively inexpensive to implement them.

Personnel/Staff Time Expenses

The personnel/staff time expenses are solely from affiliate marketing. In order to target younger audiences, micro-influencers should be hired to market Lux Leonis' products on their social media. While smaller micro-influencers may just take free products as payment, others may demand monetary compensation. Nano-influencers and micro-influencers have follower counts ranging from 1,000 to 50,000 followers and would be Lux Leonis' target for affiliate marketing. This is because Lux Leonis' past experiences with micro-influencers had proven to be more successful than with large influencers. Industry-standard says influencers should be compensated $100 per 10,000 followers (Shopify). If Lux Leonis uses these influencers twice a year during the lowest points of sales, we will allocate about $600 for spending. This allows Lux Leonis to use an influencer with up to 50,000 followers and another with up to 10,000 followers or to choose influencers with a various mix of followers. An alternative to this would be offering a portion of the revenue from sales that used the code by the influencer.

Hiring an intern is also something that Lux Leonis should consider, but with the given budget, we found it best to either offer an unpaid internship for class credit or to also offer a small portion of revenue to the intern if they aid in a significant increase in sales.

Out-of-Pocket Expenses

Administrative Cost and Supplies

One of the strategic solutions offered to Lux Leonis is to hold a giveaway from her men's product line in order to boost product awareness and expand the target market of men. The giveaway would utilize only products from Lux Leonis, but the cost would be either the total cost of making these products or the lost revenue from giving them away free of charge. We will assume the cost as the latter for budget sake and buffer against unforeseen additional expenses. The giveaway should take place at least twice during the year and will include about 6 products valued at about approximately $80, bringing the cost to $160. As for supplies, Lux Leonis should invest in basic content-creation equipment to improve her online image and give that professional look. To start, she should have a ring light tripod ($30), a clean backdrop for social media content and product photos ($20), and a good, but relatively inexpensive, camera (~$400) (Amazon). This brings administrative costs and supplies to $610. It should be noted that an intern is not in this budget because we had decided that hiring a college intern for class credit would be more cost-effective. Lux Leonis has also employed this method before.

Media and Communication Expenses

Media and communication strategy for Lux Leonis is very inexpensive. For example, every tactic for creating a cohesive brand is free of cost as Canva and other tools necessary don't require subscriptions. Similarly, search engine optimization and keeping track of analytics can also be done with free platforms. Much of the advertising and promotion for the business would be done over social media. Apart from the giveaways and the affiliate marketing with micro-influencers, promotion would consist mainly of creating good content. This is essential for a small business that may want to minimize costs as much as possible.

The only other expense to consider would be affiliate marketing through non-influencer means. This would fall under the strategy of making the direct link to the website available in more places. Affiliate links from other websites would not only promote the Lux Leonis website on its own but also increase search engine optimization. Lux Leonis has already made appearances on soap making websites and others have done reviews. Therefore, Lux Leonis should reach out to more websites such as these as well as product review websites to write about the brand and its products and include links to the website. Assuming a good, general product review of 300-500 words will cost about $30, Lux Leonis should consider reaching out to 15 or so reviewers throughout the year. For affiliate links on other websites, a commission-based model that pays a 10% portion of sales revenue would be best and minimize out-of-pocket costs. This brings media and communication expenses to $450 and the total estimated expenses to $1,660.

Estimated Expenses

CONCLUSION

For Lux Leonis to expand to the level Ania hopes her business will reach, we have laid out a series of objectives along with strategies and tactics to assist the progression of her business. The first objective would be to re-evaluate the target audience. We believe that an expansion of her target market would greatly improve her sales success. The expansion would include a more inclusive focus on the gentleman's line of products as well as the younger target market. Coupling products for special holiday season deals is a way that Ania can visually apply the expansion of her target market. The next objective would be to assemble a cohesive brand across all social media platforms and her website. With the provided media materials and style guide, this should be an easy objective to complete and implement. After this adjustment of brand cohesion, Ania should expect to see an increase in sales success, social media impressions, and website traffic. This increase in website traffic should also be amplified via SEO services and the increased output of media materials for her business. With all the details expressed in a formatted timeline and budget, the application of this PR plan would be easily executed.
